250 PLACES TO GO IN 2026

About the Author

Erin Gifford is an avid road tripper who has criss-crossed the U.S. many times, both on her own and with her family in tow. She has also explored the globe, collecting passport stamps in India, Norway, Israel, France, and Ireland, to name a few of her favorite international destinations.

A long-time travel writer, her work has appeared in The Wall Street Journal, AFAR.com, Lonely Planet, Costco Connection, Thrillist, Outside, and USA Today's GoEscape, among others.

When she's not on the road, Erin enjoys hiking and pedaling rail-trails. She writes about hiking in Virginia at www.gohikevirginia.com and is the author of three hiking guidebooks for Falcon Guides, including Hiking with Kids Virginia and Virginia Summits.

An Important Note to Readers

A quick note: the places in this digital travel guide can—and will—change. Restaurants close, museums switch hours, parks adjust their policies, and sometimes prices seem to change just because it's Tuesday. In other words, a lot of things are out of my control. So before you go, give each place a quick Google check to make sure it's open and ready for you.

In a few spots—like Antelope Canyon, Rocky Mountain National Park, and Taliesin—you'll need advance reservations, timed-entry tickets, or a guided tour to get in. Some experiences sell out days (or weeks, sometimes months) ahead. I've flagged these for you throughout the guide, and I promise I'm not being dramatic. Please take those notes seriously so you don't miss out.

Advertising, Sponsored Content & Affiliate Links

As you explore this guide, you may notice there are display ads and affiliate links sprinkled throughout. Since I spent many, many (many) hours creating this free resource, any support—whether visiting my advertisers or clicking a helpful link—is genuinely appreciated. For full transparency: if you book a tour through Viator or purchase a guidebook on Amazon, for example, I may earn a small commission. You're never required to buy anything, but if you do, it helps me keep this guide free and lets advertisers know readers love what I'm doing.

You should also know that the tours, experiences, and accommodations featured in this guide have been vetted to the best of my abilities. I've read reviews, asked around, and tried my best to make sure the extras I recommend really do make your trip better. I would be absolutely mortified if you had a poor experience because of something I suggested. I'm not a paid spokesperson, nor am I officially endorsing any brand, but based on research and feedback, these are experiences I think you will genuinely enjoy.

If you see something in a red-outlined box at the bottom of a must-do checklist, there may be an affiliate link included. Just something to keep in mind as you explore.

Introduction

Why These 250 Places?

In 2026, the United States turns 250 — a milestone that feels like an open invitation to get out and see the country. The U.S. has always been one of my favorite places to roam, and my hope is that this guide helps you explore the spots that spark your curiosity.

This PDF-style guide highlights 100 places: two must-see destinations in each of the 50 states. Naturally, you may be wondering: Isn't this supposed to be 250 places? It is — but as the guide grew, the format couldn't hold everything without becoming unwieldy. So the remaining 150 places, including all five must-sees for Washington, D.C., live on the companion site USABucketList.com, where you can explore the full collection anytime.

Why these particular places — and have I personally visited them all?

Not quite, though more than you might expect. This project is rooted in years of road-tripping, both with my kids and on my own: a 7.5-week cross-country journey, a loop around Lake Michigan, and a sweep across South Dakota that included Wall Drug, Badlands National Park, and even the Corn Palace.

For the destinations I haven't yet explored firsthand, I turned to a network of trusted, U.S.-obsessed travelers who eagerly shared their must-dos and most memorable stops. Their insights helped shape this guide into what you see today.

Choosing where to go is only half the fun — but knowing what not to miss is often what makes a trip truly memorable. Few things sting more than returning home and realizing you overlooked something amazing. To help avoid that, each destination includes a straightforward five-item must-do checklist designed to highlight the very best of each place.

This collection reaches far beyond the traditional “founding fathers circuit.” You'll find sites connected to the Louisiana Purchase, Lewis & Clark, the Civil War, World War II, the civil rights movement, the space race, 9/11, and the digital age. National and state parks sit alongside museums, cultural centers, small towns, quirky roadside stops, and uniquely American icons from Harley-Davidson to Hershey.

This guide - and the full 250-place list online - is here to inspire exploration. Here's to discovering the best of America, one unforgettable stop at a time.

Let's go!

ALASKA: ALASKA NATIVE HERITAGE CENTER

The Alaska Native Heritage Center celebrates the living cultures of Alaska's Indigenous peoples. Representing 11 major cultural groups, the center offers a deeper understanding of Alaska's first peoples through authentic experiences, traditional village sites, and daily cultural demonstrations.
